

10 October 1966

The Honorable Clark M. Clifford, Chairman
President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board
Executive Office Building
Washington, D. C.

Dear Clark:

You will note in the proposed draft Presidential letter I have sent you, there is no mention of a division of labor between the Director and the Deputy Director as described in the 16 January 1962 letter from President Kennedy to Mr. John McCone.

I do not believe it advisable to define a division of labor, and I note that the 24 September 1965 letter from President Johnson to Admiral Raborn contained no reference to this matter.

I plan to delegate to the Deputy Director as much as I can to insure that he is fully capable to act for me in my absence. I would like to utilize the complementary experience, background, and abilities of both of us to accomplish the tasks of the Director and of the Agency.

I do not want, however, to assign full responsibility to the Deputy Director for day-to-day administration and management of the CIA. To do so would merely detract from his time to concentrate on non-routine, critical tasks. Day-to-day administration and management of the Agency is accomplished by the Executive Director-Comptroller. This is a post of particular importance in these times of economy and requirements for cost-effectiveness and studies of resource allocations. I have every confidence in Colonel L. E. (Red) White, who occupies this office.

It is my belief that the concept of a Director of Central Intelligence who tries to function wholly separated from the CIA is basically unworkable, and I presume that this accounts for the fact that President Johnson's letter to Admiral Raborn did not repeat the earlier 1962 stipulation of division of labor between the Director and the Deputy Director. In any event, I find advantage in this for the reasons described above.

Let me assure you that I take with utmost seriousness my duties as Director of Central Intelligence in coordinating and guiding the work of the intelligence community. I will work hard at this task. I am confident that real improvements can be made.

I see my role as head of the Agency as of similar importance. I believe these roles are complementary, not conflicting. I want to be able to work closely with the Deputy Director in performing them both.

Cordially,

/s/ Richard Helms
